

How does my video respond to the Truism that I picked? To help you answer this question, think of what your video emphasizes about Truism.

The truism that I picked was “REPETITION IS THE BEST WAY TO LEARN”. My video relates to the truism that I picked because skating is a very repetitive sport. It requires many tries to land even a simple trick. I’ve been skating for 4 years and used to have kickflips down pretty well. Once college started, I didn’t really skate much. I went out and tried landing a kickflip, and it took me well over 10 minutes of trying to land a horrible kickflip. I went out the next day after filming to try again, and it took less time to land it.

How does my new video respond to my truism?

My new video responds to my truism because I believe that with enough practice, people can change their ways. For example, I curse sometimes, and I absolutely hate that I do. I’ve been practicing a lot on toning it down, and so far, it is going very well.

What is the sound you are using?

The sound that I am using is a song by Max Cooper, literally called, “Repetition”.

How does that sound respond or otherwise work with the Truism or with the videos in your project?

The sound works with my truism as it is simply repetitive. My truism is all about repetition, so I thought that it would be fitting to add it to my project.
